Native American Ecology: Siletz tribe's Wisdom in Protecting the Soil

Rachel Summer Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians of Oregon

Native Americans have the shortest life spans and most childhood deaths of any group in America. Many elders do not have access to fresh foods. A Siletz program, Healthy Traditions, encourages community, sharing, and sustainability in the cycle of food growing, harvesting, processing, storing and consumption. Improvements to procedures are made possible through partnerships and support from other community members and groups like PSU, Oregon Food Bank, OSU Master Gardeners, nurseries and growers, as well as Native American herbalists, foresters and agriculturists. Rachel will be talking about the steps her tribe took to create Healthy Traditions and community garden programs and goals, and how they honor Mother Nature and Creator in their efforts.

Rachel Summer is a double native—Native American (Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians) and born in Oregon. She worked in law enforcement, ironwork, and local government administration before retiring in 2005 to work with other Tribal members to improve the lives of the people by instituting and nurturing better food and farming practices.

February Program: Monday, February 8, 2016 Native Plants

Linda Hardison, Oregon Flora Project www.oregonflora.org/

What constitutes a native plant for gardeners in the Portland metro region? Native to North America? The Pacific Northwest? Or a Douglas Fir forest on Mount Hood? Or the banks of the Clackamas River? Linda Hardison, director of the Oregon Flora Project (OFP), is uniquely qualified to speak on this and offer advice on the use native plants in our gardens. Speaking from the perspective of the OFP, she will introduce us to a myriad of Oregon's native plants – along with naturalized and exotic species. Together we will learn the context from which these plants arise and gain an appreciation for the biodiversity found in our state. MG Education Credit*

Green Glove Award: Dottie Alberg, Class of 2008

A willing volunteer, Dottie is always ready to lend a hand. She has worked as the volunteer coordinator at Crystal Springs Rhododendron Garden. We also see her smiling face working at the Spring Garden Fair, and our Garden Discovery Day/Fall into Gardening programs. We are fortunate to have volunteers like you - thank you Dottie, for all that you do!
